

The Glimmer is the last in Seattle Pro Musica's New American Composers concert series, featuring composer Jerod Impichchaachaaha' Tate. Tate, a citizen of the Chickasaw Nation in Oklahoma, is dedicated to the development of American Indian classical composition.

For his Seattle Pro Musica commissioned work, Jerod is setting the poem The Glimmer by Washington state poet laureate Rena Priest. Sharing about the cultural influences of his new work, he says, "Most of my commissioned works focus on tribal culture directly from the land of the commissioner. It is my way of helping the performers and public become closer to their tribal neighbors. The Glimmer deeply echoes the ethos of Lummi and local Salish culture. Out of respect, there is not a direct quote of specific melodies; however, it is greatly influenced by the regional paddle songs. This poem also speaks a language evocative of the sea and it is my hope that the listener and performers resonate with the gestures in this work."

Jerod Tate, Rena Priest, and Seattle Pro Musica Artistic Director Karen P. Thomas will have a pre-concert conversation and Q & A in advance of the performance.
